

Editorial

The first article in this issue is by Leon Goldman, M.D. and is entitled Future of Laser Dermatology. We have seen rapid advancement of lasers in dermatology over the past several years. The laser skin resurfacing, laser hair removal, and laser treatment of leg veins have sparked new and intense interest in laser medicine. It is appropriate at this point that we should consider where we are going and what the future might hold. So, I am grateful to include a review and assessment type article, especially by such a distinguished senior author. However, on behalf of my staff, I must first offer my sincere apologies to Dr. Goldman. His manuscript, Future of Laser Dermatology was written nearly five years ago. It was accepted for publication in May, 1995. I regret the error, but I am happy to finally see the article published. Due to the long delay, I have allowed Dr. Goldman to make a comment to update this manuscript. I appreciate his patience and understanding.
